The Bear is a 16th century (or earlier) cottage in the heart of Stoke, a small hamlet between Hartland and Hartland Quay in one of the most unspoilt parts of England. In the early 18thC it was, for a short time, a hostelry when Hartland Quay had had its licence withdrawn for rowdy and drunken behaviour! The hamlet of Stoke consists of a few cottages and the beautiful church of St Nectan, called 'The Cathedral of North Devon' due to its huge size and tall tower, once used by wreckers to entice ships onto the rocky shore whose captains believed it to be the lighthouse!

The Bear has been extensively renovated. It is cosy, whether you are two people or eight, and provides comfortable accommodation all year round. The cottage is part of the Hartland Abbey Estate, renowned for its beauty, which lies 3 miles south of Hartland Point and is within easy walking distance of the coast and Hartland Quay. Guests are able to enjoy the stunning Atlantic coastline with its huge cliffs, sandy beaches, rocky coves and views to Lundy Island. Surfers enjoy the big rollers at Hartland Quay and other coves nearby and there are plenty of beaches suitable for children within a short distance.

Hartland village has very good small shops, fresh fish nearby, a fruit and veg delivery; we do ask guests to support local stores wherever possible. On booking we send guests a list of local shops, pubs, restaurants, attractions etc. Hartland Quay has a good pub overlooking the Atlantic which is great fun for lunch or in the evening. Historic Hartland Abbey, formerly a 12thC monastery and in the same family ownership since the Dissolution, is close by; it has fascinating interiors and collections and wonderful gardens. There is a woodland walk to a wild Atlantic cove where the cottage was the location for 'Barton Cottage' in the BBC's adaptation for Jane Austen's 'Sense and Sensibility'. Clovelly is only 5 miles away with its cobbled street, donkeys and lovely harbour; there are also many other attractions within easy driving distance as are the towns of Barnstaple, Bideford and Bude. Exmoor is approximately an hour away. There is wonderful walking from the front door; wildflowers abound in spring and early summer.
